BRUCE CANYON NATIONAL PARK

The distinct and other-worldly-looking sandstone hoodoos and rock spires of Utah's Bryce Canyon National Park create an amazing maze of beauty for travelers to view and explore. It isn't actually a canyon at all, but more specifically a large amphitheater carved into the Pink Cliffs, and each visitor can choose how to best explore it. Whether you drive the scenic drive and utilize the overlooks, or hike deep into the rock formations below, it is guaranteed that the colors and formations of this park will remain a unique memory.

VIEW THE PANORAMAS FROM SUNRISE AND SUNSET POINTS

Sunrise and Sunset Points are located about one mile south of the visitors center and are connected by the 0.5 mile paved Rim Trail (see below for details). The vistas from each point provide spectacular views of Bryce Amphitheater and beyond.

SEE THE HOODOOS

In addition to viewing the Amphitheater, you can view these incredible rock formations from Inspiration Point. To get there, drive Bryce Point Road to the turnoff for Inspiration Point, and you can even take a 0.2 mile walk to reach the higher Upper Inspiration Point.

RIM TRAIL

(11 MILES ROUNDTrip, RELAXED, 5-6H)

This travel follows the edge of Bryce Amphitheater for 5.5 miles between Fairyland and Bryce Point. The beauty of this trail is that you can do as much or as little of it as you would like. The 0.5 mile section of the trail near the lodge and between Sunrise and Sunset Points is paved and easy for children.

NAVAJO LOOP TRAIL TO QUEEN'S GARDEN TRAIL

(3.5 MILES ROUNDTrip, MODERATE/STRENUOUS, 3H)

This trail takes you 520 vertical feet down into a narrow canyon, leading into Wall Street, a narrower 0.5 mile-long canyon, and then returns to the rim (note: you will need to hike back UP the canyon, so save stamina for the end!).
